Residual life of chlorpropham in maize: effects of soil characteristics. Simulated rainfall procedures were conducted to investigate the residual life of chlorpropham in maize after 0.1, 1, or 10 mm of rainfall. Soil samples were taken at the 15th and 30th days, and analyzed for pesticide residue. Tests on soil containing chlorpropham residues showed that there was no significant difference in residual levels between the two soil samples taken at the 15th day, but at 30 days, the test soil sample showed significantly higher chlorpropham residues than the control soil sample. The half-life time was found to be 7.78 and 22.19 days in the control and test soil samples, respectively. After rainfall, there was a decrease in chlorpropham residues. The decline rate was similar in both the soil samples, and the half-life time was found to be 7.31 and 7.71 days in the control and test soil samples, respectively.

Application of fungicides caused a negative effect on the retention of chlorpropham in maize.[Migration of semen into the vagina]. Among causes of leucorrhoea and vaginal discharge a migration of semen can be considered as important. It can be due to a local traumatic disturbance of the male sexual organ, an ejaculation of very recently deposited semen or an entering into the vagina during masturbation or by a partner. The clinical findings include a vaginal discharge varying from clear to mucousy, from clear to yellow, from white to yellow, from white to red or from yellow to brown or blood-stained. As for the character of the discharge it may be sticky, rough, or compact. It also may be mixed with the presence of blood. Cervical smears and papillofunctions confirm the leucorrhoea or vaginal discharge. After many months of gestation an oedematous lesion of the vaginal mucous is found. in the manifest. I've been searching online and have tried a few things but nothing works. The first one is caused because the package name is com.somelocation.mapper rather than com.somelocation.mapper.Test. The second one is that I tried adding it to the manifest but as I said, I can't find it there. This is my manifest. It uses a MapFragment. 648931e174
